

SHOW YOUR SUPPORT

at the

2010 FESTIVAL VOLUNTEER FAIR

By: Volunteer Edmonton

Help Edmonton keep its reigning title of "Festival City" by attending the 3rd annual Festival Volunteer Fair on May 12 at City Hall from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

This event, hosted by Volunteer Edmonton, will give Edmontonians the opportunity to find out how to become a volunteer with one of the many arts and culture-related festivals that take place throughout the year.

About 20 festivals, celebrating visual arts, dance, music, culture, film, performance and more, will be on site showcasing their volunteer opportunities. Visitors will have the chance to browse the various displays and booths, speak one-on-one with festival representatives about volunteering and even fill out volunteer applications on the spot. The hope is that the event provides visitors with the ease and convenience of a "one-stop festival volunteer shopping" experience.

Since most festivals operate for a short period of time, volunteer opportunities could require a few days or a few weeks at most—which is great for students of out of school, busy parents, retirees, newcomers or just for people who have a limited amount of time to contribute.

The sky's the limit when it comes to the kind of volunteer opportunities available. Depending on the festival, there could be opportunities to help out as greeters, costume designers, clean-up crews, food services, cashiers and so much more.

While the goal of the Festival Volunteer Fair is to help drum up volunteer support for festivals, it's also an opportunity for Edmontonians to learn about the sheer variety of festivals that exist. Many festivals are completely volunteer-run, newly established or lack the budget required to reach a wide audience. The Festival Volunteer Fair offers festivals an opportunity to showcase their festival and what they're all about.

Consider attending this year's Festival Volunteer Fair to find out how to become part of the volunteer spirit that makes Edmonton a great place to live.
